Candidates for the Board of County Commissioner's Position #3 – Greg Brotherton and Marcia Kelbon – faced each other last night in a debate sponsored by the League of Women Voters, presented in a Zoom webinar and streamed here on KPTZ. In his opening statement, Brotherton, a Democrat, stressed achievements with the Board of County Commissioners; and Kelbon, a Republican, expressed concerns that mental illness and addiction were at the root of the homeless problems in Jefferson County.

In general, questions provided by voters were answered in equanimity by both candidates. Topics included changes in new building ordinances and how they might affect affordable housing, ways of dealing with the homeless crisis in the County, transgender rights, representation of outlying communities within the district and whether racism should be regarded as a public health crisis.

The greatest disparity in views between the two candidates regarded homelessness, with Kelbon asserting "If you go through the shelters, most of what you find are people who are...really sick." She suggested using the shelters as a "lever" for individuals actively seeking rehab. Brotherton found this approach "unconscionable" and said, "we need to work harder" and "be open to learn in a different way."

In the closing statements, Kelbon emphasized that she was a moderate Republican and "not represented by any political party on a national level." Brotherton enthused that an unprecedented amount of state and federal money had come into Jefferson County, but that there was still work to do. Both candidates reprise their debate tonight at the Chimacum Grange Hall. A YouTube video of last night's debate will be posted online in one week.

Caleb Jesse Chapman, 42 of Port Angeles, who was sentenced October 7 on a charge of interfering with a federal communications system during a three-day standoff with police in Olympic National Park in August 2021, was given three years of probation during his sentencing Friday in U.S. District Court in Tacoma. He had been under the influence of methamphetamine during the 2021 incident and pleaded guilty to the crime this past July. Speaking to the PT Leader, Nick Brown, U.S. Attorney for the Western District of Washington, said Chapman has been trying to address his drug problems in the time since his arrest. Law enforcement had to evacuate the Deer Park campgrounds, trailheads, and road areas, and attempt to locate Chapman. On August 29, 2021, Chapman disabled the Olympic National Park radio communications site, the radio repeater that's located at the summit of Blue Mountain and is used by the park for emergency response, public safety, and administrative radio communications. Law enforcement was eventually able to negotiate Chapman's surrender with no injuries to anyone. After the standoff, Chapman was found to possess nine firearms including a stolen handgun, an AR-15 rifle, and two shotguns. Police said he had more than 3,500 rounds of ammunition.

In an interview with the Peninsula Daily News, Clallam County prosecuting attorney Michele Devlin said, "A new victim has come forward and the defense council and I agreed to set the hearing out a couple of weeks so that we can get that information, get the police reports, and then we can better figure out a more viable trial date.”

KING 5 News reports that a ship strike likely killed a humpback whale found dead on Ruby Beach earlier on October 5. The whale showed “clear indications of blunt force trauma,” according to researchers. It was one of two whales believed to have been killed by ship strikes in Washington this month, according to the West Coast Marine Mammal Stranding Network. The humpback whale, a young female approximately 26-feet long, had “severe bruising and internal bleeding” and likely a recently weaned calf or yearling according to the Stranding Network. The same day the humpback whale was reported on the coast, a minke whale was found floating near the San Juan Islands and, earlier this year, three gray whales died from what researchers said was likely the result of ship strikes.
